SHOULD STUDENTS WEAR UNIFORMS TO SCHOOL?

Arguments On Whether Or Not Students Should Still Wear Uniforms

Instruction

Read through the article below to uncover some valid points on whether or not students should wear uniforms to school

Does The Obligation Still Stand?

A resounding yes! Many hold different views and opinions about this subject matter, but my response would be a firm and long-standing YES to the question. Why? My article covers just the answers you'll need to recalibrate your assumptions about the idea.

Although others may still object to my explanations, my responses carry a well-thought-out reasoning behind why the obligation, in fact, still stands. And I believe without a doubt that schools would also support and back-up this new analysis. So, sorry to burst your little bubble of sophistication, but I don't think school uniforms will be going anywhere any time soon. At least not for the next century.

Why Students Should Wear Uniform To School

1. Culture differentiation among other schools

School uniforms instantly represent a school's culture. Think of a school anthem sung at the school hall, the school's color code i.e. ones found in sports, or even the school flag or board. All these combined form the essential background and culture of the school, some of which may have been running for decades from the time the school was even established. This does well to form and represent the culture of the school through uniforms by setting it apart from other schools, thus making it stand out for its own operations and ways of doing things. This not only forms the culture, but builds the reputation of the school even just by spotting one student from the street representing the school's uniform

2. Uniforms represent the school's brand and its uniqueness

We all know that a brand always tells a story about a business. This is no different for a school. Those badges that you see on school jerseys, shirts and dresses are not just for random display. They have meaning. They tell a story about the history of the school and how it came about without the use of too many words. Think of the symbols and slogan used to tell of the school's uniqueness and what makes it different from other schools. The school brands also do great job for promotional purposes on social media platforms to increase awareness about the school.

3. Discipline: Maintains the school's dignity and respect

School uniforms are also used to increase the school's discipline and make it look as presentable as possible to external passersby and onlookers. One way for a school to restore and maintain its dignity is by making sure that all students are fully dressed in uniform and look as neat as possible. This is why you'll find that many school cultures involve the implementation of the selection of a particular group of students to represent the school as candidate monitors so as to discipline the subordinate students. This thus maintains an ongoing structure of discipline and respect for the school's image.

4. Color code of a school uniform forms a familiar, ingrained memory in the minds of students- and other schools alike

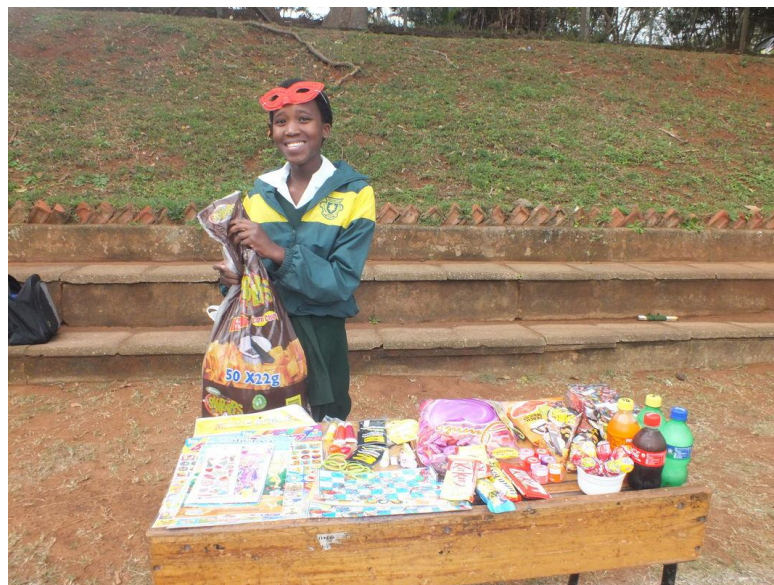

This goes without saying. The colors used to represent a school uniform, along with the sports and swimming attires, set a lasting memory on the minds of the students who had the honor and privilege of going to that particular school. Think of the many memories made through the grades by the students during sport and swimming events, and other school-related activities. Those memories will stay with them forever, and the school's color code is just a portion of that memory. When students go down memory lane, the first thing they'll think about are the color-coded teams that they had the pleasure of being a part of back in those days.

5. It indicates the growing phase of a child before he/she transitions to go to College

Patience is the most important thing to teach a child to have. It teaches them that everything has its own time. There's a time for everything in life, and this thus teaches students the importance of waiting. Waiting on their freedom to wear the clothes of their choice in College when the time comes. This establishes them with a unique set of values and beliefs that they will stay with them in each of their individual journeys. Children learn to make the most of their school days before moving on to adulthood. This lack of monotony promotes the unpredictability of life, which keeps it exciting.

School is life, and uniforms form a huge part of that. Where there is school, you'll find uniform. So, embrace the uniform age, kids. It's all part of the equation. No additions, no subtractions, just what you can get out of it, is what truly matters.

These are my kind of treasured memories 🥰👍
